In March 2014 then-Faculty Senate president Gary Tyson appointed Senator colleague Dennis Moore to chair a new Road Scholars Committee, whose members Moore helped choose:

Todd Adams, in Physics;
Vice-chair of the Faculty Senate Steering Committee

Greg Beaumont
Associate Dean of Academic Affairs; Senior Associate Athletic Director for Academics

Aline Kalbian, in Religion

Dennis Moore, in English

Denise Von Glahn, in Music
(who now succeeds original committee member Prof. Jane Piper Clendinning, also in Music)

Margaret Wright-Cleveland
Director of the Office of Faculty Recognition and a 2015-2016 Fulbright Scholar in Côte d’Ivoire

The committee stages five presentations each academic year by outstanding scholars from other institutions in the Atlantic Coast Conference, scheduling each to coincide with an athletic event. FSU’s Office of the Provost provides funding for honoraria, airfare and lodging, and the committee arranges for an academic unit (or a portion thereof, as with our October 2014 speaker) to host each visiting scholar:

*Professor Tyson contacted me in December 2013 -- having noticed that I had been FSU’s faculty member whom Clemson University had invited to participate in their “Humanities Road Scholars” series that Fall -- to ask if I thought we might develop our own series along these lines. As I told him, Peggy Wright-Cleveland and I had already been comparing notes about just such a possibility, and when he asked if I would chair and help populate a Faculty Senate committee that would adapt this model, I was happy to agree. My committee colleagues and I’ve been acknowledging the fact that we learned about the idea from Clemson, where my counterpart in their English Department wanted to emphasize that it’s not all about athletics. Hear hear!*
